Alireza Karimi was born in 1973 and started his current occupation in an oil service station in 1989. Since the very beginning, he had a very different view toward work and personally innovated and relied on the experience of elders to provide different services and turn the service station into one of the most distinguished, clean, and deluxe service stations across Iran. He offered different services and attracted customers and reputation in Rafsanjan, and expanded his operations by distributing petroleum products in Rafsanjan county until in 1996 he started to expand his business by opening two branches in Tehran to distribute petroleum products in Tehran and other cities across Iran.

Since his view was not constrained to the domestic market and he always dreamed of production, he and his colleagues established Pardis Engine Oil Co. in 2002 and took a step toward production and exports, his career, and the province's exports. With their capabilities and diligence, they introduced Pardis Engine Oil Co. to the global export markets, which continued until the company's recognition in 2007 as a leading exporter.

He is currently Pardis Engine Oil Company's CEO and board member and strives to improve the quality of products and enter more global markets, and is determined to maintain Pardis Engine Oil Co.'s position as the only solid production and export company in re-refining petroleum products to operate in Iran. His vision is to expand export markets and create new bases for increased production.
